A GOLD MINE FOR BELGIAN HISTORIOGRAPHY,

Research (1980-2013) concerning the Middle Ages using the Archivio Segreto Vaticano – Research (1980-2013) using the Archivio Segreto Vaticano concerning the Early Modern Period – Contemporary period (1800-1939; 1962-1965) – Church, politics and society – Philosophical-theological tensions and initiatives – Second Vatican Council – Art, culture, sport culture and research – Colonialism, missionary work and religious institutes – Accessibility

Belgian historians quickly found their way to the wealth and variety of documents contained in the Archivio Segreto Vaticano after it was opened by Pope Leo XIII in 1881. Besides allowing researchers to complete their sources, the Archivio Segreto Vaticano above all enabled them to look at historical developments from a wider perspective, or “helicopter view”.

In order to provide a more efficient framework for their research, The Belgian Historical Institute in Rome/Institut historique belge de Rome was founded in 1902. A federally-funded scholarly institute, it is concerned with the study of the history of Italy and Rome from antiquity to the present, in particular their relationships with the territory now known as Belgium, as well as the European dimensions of these relations. The Belgian Historical Institute in Rome/Institut historique belge de Rome's official headquarters is in the offices of the Academia Belgica in Rome. Its working address is that of the chairperson of the Institute.¹ The Belgian Historical Institute in Rome/Institut historique belge de Rome's operations are facilitated by the indispensable help of the Academia Belgica, the Belgian House of Science, Arts and Culture in Rome.² The third partner is the Princess Marie José Foundation, whose work revolves around the world of art and music.³

The Belgian Historical Institute in Rome/Institut historique belge de Rome's objectives are achieved in the research by junior and senior researchers in the fields of history, art history, philology and archaeology. This research is made possible by grants provided by both of Belgium's cultural communities. In addition, the Institute also organizes colloquia and congresses with the Roman partners mentioned above. The fruits of all these activities can be found in the previous and current new publication series of the Belgian Historical Institute in Rome/Institut historique belge de Rome. Its former Bulletin has now been replaced by the e-magazine «Forum Romanum Belgicum» as its communications instrument.⁴

The results of the research can now be seen in a chronologically and thematically structured overview.

Research (1980-2013) concerning the Middle Ages using the Archivio Segreto Vaticano⁵

In contrast to a wealth of past Belgian research of medieval sources in the Archivio Segreto Vaticano,⁶ the period of 1980-2013 seems to have yielded little that is new.

The solace is provided by the series Analecta Vaticano-Belgica. Première Série (Documents relatifs aux anciens diocèses de Cambrai, Liège, Thérouanne et Tournai), started in 1906.

Jeannine Paye-Bourgeois⁷ and Monique Maillard-Luypaert⁸ studied the documents related to the Great Schism, under Popes Benedict XIII (1394-1422) and Innocent VI (1404-1406) respectively. Maillard-Luypaert published an article in the same series about the petitions submitted to the Apostolic Penitentiary in 1410-1411, and is currently preparing the edition of the petitions under the popes Eugene IV (1431-1447) and Nicholas V (1447-1455).⁹ In the meantime, she has published another book and several articles.¹⁰ In the same context, we are also anticipating the results of Sofie Glansdorff's study of the letters of pope Boniface IX (1394-1404) to their respective "Belgian" bishoprics.

Emmanuël Falzone consulted the Archivio Segreto Vaticano for his doctoral degree, awarded in 2011 by the University of Saint-Louis (Brussels) about the legal power of the bishops of Cambrai. In more concrete terms it is a study of the officialities of Cambrai and Brussels from the late 12th century until the creation of new bishoprics in 1559.¹¹

Both Michiel Decaluwe and Jonathan Dumont concentrated on the relationships between popes and Duke Philip the Good (1459-1467). Decaluwe also worked on the struggle between Pope Eugene IV and the Council of Basel with as his main thrust the supreme authority in the Church from 1431-1449.¹² Dumont's work was for his doctorate from the University of Liege about the political, cultural and intellectual relations at the court of Philip the Good.¹³

Also certainly worthy of mention is the fact that Véronique Lambert made use of the collection Registri Vaticani for her study of the records of the St. Donatians's chapter in Bruges, dating from the 9th century to 1300.¹⁴

Otherwise, Belgian historians and art historians researching the medieval period have worked much more on manuscripts from the Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana.

Research (1980-2013) using the Archivio Segreto Vaticano concerning the Early Modern Period

Belgian research on the Early Modern Period (c. 1500-c. 1800) is concentrated around five main themes.

For the first time there is an enduring interest in the study of Jansenism, the condemnatory bull “Unigenitus” and the role of the university of Leuven. Following in the footsteps of Lucien Ceyssens, who still published many articles after 1980,¹⁵ are the studies by Agnès Vatican¹⁶ and Toon Quaeghebeur.¹⁷ This category also includes the research by Bruno Boute on Roman networks and royal agency in the conflict around the right of Leuven to appoint lower-level benefices in the Catholic Netherlands (1597-1619).¹⁸ He has written another article, partly based on the Archivio Segreto Vaticano, about the Leuven professor Jacobus Jansonius (1547-1625).¹⁹

The study of the reports from the Nunciatures is still a research pillar. In the matter of the Nunciature of Flanders, in addition to the articles by Louis Demoulin²⁰, Lambert Henri Vos²¹ and Valérie Busin²² in the second series

We certainly must also mention his paper entitled Damen, an anti-Jansenist in the Service of the Archbishops of Mechlin 1690-1730, in *The Quintessence of Lives. A of the Analecta Vaticano-Belgica, there is the research by Bart Wauters²³ as part of his master's thesis. In a volume on diplomatic culture, Wauters and Dries Vanysacker used the Archivio Segreto Vaticano for their articles about the Nunciatures from the 16th to 18th centuries.²⁴ Luc Duerloo²⁵ and Dries Raeymaekers²⁶ concentrated on the traces of evidence about the court of the archdukes Albert and Isabella (1598-1621). Very recently, as part of his current doctoral dissertation at the University of Liege, Julien Régibeau studied the role of the permanent Nunciatures during the Congress of Westphalia (1644-1648).²⁷ Pierre-François Pirlet consulted the correspondence from the nuncios to the Secretary of State as part of his doctoral dissertation about the relations between the confessors of the governors-general of the Netherlands and Rome (1598-1665).²⁸

The reports from the Liege Nunciature in the early modern period are important for understanding the history of the bishopric of Liege. In the second series B of the Analecta Vaticano-Belgica, we have articles from Frédérique Donnay,²⁹ and Pascale Derkenne and Philippe Gemis.³⁰ The studies by Jean Hoyoux³¹ about the Liege abbeys and chapters and those by Marie-Élisabeth Montulet-Henneau³² about the Cistercian abbey of Hocht can also be included here. Philippe Desmette's study, in the first series of Analecta Vaticano-Belgica, is particular to the history of the bishoprics. In it, the author discusses the indulgences for the brotherhoods in the bishoprics of Cambrai and Tournai during the 17th and 18th centuries.³³ Michel Van Nimmen studied the relationship between the Irish bishop O'Daly and the chapter of Tournai in the 18th century.³⁴

The fourth theme is biographical studies of cardinals and members of the Roman Curia. Besides the papers by Carlo De Clercq³⁵ and Luis Demoulin,³⁶ about the 17th-century cardinal Philippe-Thomas Howard and the 18th-century cardinal Scipione Borghese respectively, we must first and foremost mention the unpublished doctoral thesis, books and articles by Vanysacker about the 18th-century cardinal Giuseppe Garampi.³⁷ For his study of this prefect of the Vatican archives (from 1751-1772), nuncio to Warsaw and Vienna (1772-1785) and enlightened Ultramontane diplomat, Vanysacker consulted besides the Fondo Garampi in the Archivio Segreto Vaticano, also the Archivio della Prefettura, the archives of the previously mentioned Nunciatures.

The fifth theme is the research around the registers of the Sacred Congregation of Rites examined by Annick Delfosse as part of her study of the worship of saints and the veneration of the Virgin in the 17th and 18th centuries.³⁸

Lastly, we must not lose sight of the studies that only indirectly made use of the various collections in the Archivio Segreto Vaticano. Bart De Groof consulted the archives of the Dataria, the Fondo Borghese, the Fondo Carpegna, Lettere dei particolari and Protonotari apostolici for his research on the Nazionale Fiamminga in 17th-century Rome.³⁹ Hans Cools also used the archives indirectly for his article about Francesco Feroni (1640-1672).⁴⁰

Contemporary period (1800-1939; 1962-1965)

In the last three decades, the Belgian historians researching the 19th and 20th centuries have also found their way to the Archivio Segreto Vaticano. Building on existing research and at the urging of several renowned historians such as Robrecht Boudens, Roger Aubert and Emiel Lamberts, the Vatican sources were primarily examined in research connected to two main themes. A considerable number of publications focussed on the relations between Church and State, from both an international and a Belgian perspective, from the 1830s up to the eve of the Second World War. A second important research component comprises the studies of tensions within the Church around theological and social reforms. Besides these two dominant historical subjects, there was a more modest interest in other themes such as art and culture, missionary work and religious institutes. The release of the Vatican's archives associated with the Second Vatican Council (1962-1965) in turn stimulated research on the significant contributions made by Belgian protagonists. Much was also done in Belgium between 1980 and 2010 to make the Belgica in the Archivio Segreto Vaticano more easily accessible, as will be described in detail at the end of this article.

Church, politics and society

The documentation in the Archivio Segreto Vaticano – in particular the documents of the Belgian Nunciature, the Secretary of State and the Congregation for Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs – was in the first place an important source for helping to determine the position of the Church in a society which was undergoing fundamental changes in the 19th and early 20th centuries. Belgian independence in 1830 and – above all – interaction with the liberal Belgian state system created shaky diplomatic relationships between Belgium and the Holy See during the long 19th century. Various authors focused on remarkable individuals or crucial periods within this context.⁴¹ Vincent Viaene, in Belgium and the Holy See, provided a synthesis of thirty years of reciprocal influence in the political, social and religious domains in the time of the Catholic revival in Belgium (ca. 1830-ca. 1860).⁴² Henk De Smaele focused on the influence of the Church and religion on voting behaviour in Belgium, with the help of sources from the Archivio Segreto Vaticano.⁴³

The formation of a Christian social doctrine and the rise of Christian democracy were studied and documented – especially in Flanders – by several historians using Vatican sources. Examples include the works by Jan De Maeyer about the socially engaged aristocrat Arthur Verhaegen and by Frans-Jos Verdoodt about the priest Adolf Daens. Both of these men were active in the new Christian workers' movement and in Christian democracy.⁴⁴

Emiel Lamberts also published on the Catholic Church's turn to the people starting in the second half of the 19th century, not only in the Belgian context, but also from a European perspective. In his most recent works The

Black International (as editor) and Het gevecht met Leviathan, he used documents from the Archivio Segreto Vaticano collection in his analysis of the strategies used by the Catholic Church, prominent Catholics, and the Vatican to safeguard their position against the omnipotence of the secular state and liberal, socialist and anti-clerical forces in 19th- and early 20th-century Europe.⁴⁵ In The Papacy and The New World Order, edited by Vincent Viaene, Vatican sources help these strategies to be examined in an even wider context, namely against the background of the globalizing and imperialist policies of the last quarter of the 19th century.⁴⁶

Belgian historians also used the archives of the Secretary of State, the Nunciature and the Congregation for Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs to shed light on the Belgian contacts and the politics of the early 20th-century popes (Benedict XV and Pius XI), both in the context of the First World War and of the increasing international tension during the interbellum years.⁴⁷

Philosophical-theological tensions and initiatives

Not only did the rapidly changing society of the 19th century prompt the Church and its hierarchy to create a new political and social doctrine; it also generated theological and philosophical tension within the Church. Ickx produced a detailed study of the conflict between the 19th-century progressive Leuven philosopher Ubaghs and the Vatican.⁴⁸ The Ubaghs “affair” had been analyzed earlier by Leo Kenis as part of his doctorate about the history of the Leuven theology faculty.⁴⁹

Kenis also recently published about another persistent philosophical-theological conflict in the late 19th and 20th centuries: religious modernism and neo-Thomism.⁵⁰ Previous authors including Roger Aubert, Robrecht Boudens and Luc Courtois had published on this issue with the help of sources from the Archivio Segreto Vaticano, often focused on the Leuven professor and later archbishop Désiré-Joseph Mercier (1851-1926).⁵¹ These authors were interested in his struggle against modernism and his role in the spread of Thomist philosophy and the founding of the Higher Institute for Philosophy at the University of Leuven in 1889.⁵² The research on his position on the Flemish struggle for emancipation was also supported with Vatican sources.⁵³

Art, culture, sport culture and research

Documents in the Archivio Segreto Vaticano not only were consulted as part of political, social, theological or philosophical research, but also for studies of artistic, cultural and scholarly relations between Belgium, the Belgian Church and the Vatican. For instance, Christine Dupont used the Vatican archives in her study of patronage and networks of Belgian artists in Italy; Dries Vanysacker did research on Pius X's attitude to the use of the bicycle by his clergy, and on the Holy See's attitude to the increasing importance of the phenomenon of "sport" during the Interbellum; André Tihon devoted a study to the history of the Belgian College (Belgisch College) in Rome.⁶¹

Colonialism, missionary work and religious institutes

Only a handful of historians used Archivio Segreto Vaticano sources for research on the history of Congo. Yet, among other things the Archivio Segreto Vaticano contains the already partially released archives of the Apostolic Delegation to the Belgian Congo. These documents are interesting for studies of the former Belgian colony and a valuable complement to the sources from the more frequently consulted archives of Propaganda Fide. Vincent Viaene studied documents from the Archivio Segreto Vaticano for his article about the communication between King Leopold II and the Vatican about his African colony.⁶² Wim François did the same for his research on the place of Catholic missions in Congo Free State.⁶³

Congo is the subject of additional research, including a number of monographs about Belgian (or Belgian divisions of) religious institutes doing missionary work, which to a limited extent are based on Vatican sources. Among these are the publications about the missionaries from Scheut and the Passionists.⁶⁴ As in most of the other historical articles about religious institutes, however, the authors mainly rely on the provincial or general archives of the orders and congregations. There is less frequent research in the Archivio Segreto Vaticano. Exceptions to this are the studies by Leo Van Dyck about Corselis and the Norbertines of Tongerlo, by Philippe Annaert about the school of the Belgian Ursulines in Rome, by Marie-Thérèse Lacroix and again Vincent Viaene about the turbulent 19th-century history of the Dames de Saint-André of Tournai, as well as the recently published collection The Economics of Providence, about the financial and heritage management by European religious institutes and a discussion of the “invasion” of French religious refugees in Belgium in the early 20th century.⁶⁵ The work of Loonbeek and Mortiau about the Belgian Benedictine Lambert Beauduin (1873-1960), protagonist of the 20th-century liturgical and ecumenical movements, also must be mentioned here.⁶⁶

Accessibility

In the last few decades there have been made great efforts to improve accessibility of the “Belgica” in the collections of the Archivio Segreto Vaticano. Jan Art gave the initial impetus with his 1980 article about the archives of the pontificate of Leo XIII.⁶⁷ Later on, also KADOC-KU Leuven focussed on facilitating research by contemporary historians, in particular by those researchers wanting to study the interaction between religion, culture and society from ca. 1750 to today. "KADOC - Documentatie- en Onderzoekscentrum voor Religie, Cultuur en Samenleving, 1750 – heden" is an interfaculty institute of the KU Leuven, accredited and subsidized as a national cultural archival institution by the Flemish Community.⁶⁸ Along with "ARCA - Archives du monde catholique", connected with the Université catholique de Louvain at Louvain-la-Neuve, KADOC attempted to bring the Vatican archives to the attention of Belgian historians.⁶⁹

KADOC became operational in 1976-1977. In 1980, it started with the production of inventories and microfilms of Belgica in the archives of the Secretary of State, the Congregation for Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs and the Belgian Nunciature. Several inventories were created, covering the pontificates of Pius IX, Leo XIII, Pius X and Benedict XV. To increase its accessibility to the public, selected documents were put on microfilm. A more recent contribution involves the pontificate of Pius XI.⁷⁰ This latest project, financed with the support of the Flemish Community, was entitled "Flanders and the Vatican". The project aimed to contradict the prevailing opinions that research in the Vatican archives is too complex, too expensive and out of historiographical fashion. It tried to find ways to make the Archivio Segreto Vaticano attractive once again. With this goal in mind, a digital heritage guide was designed, which would guide the public through the archives of the Holy See. Specialized researchers were given the opportunity to navigate to the chronological lists containing the Belgica which could be of value to their research. The archival documents and their components are globally described in accordance with international standards in the web databank ODIS, while contextual information concerning individuals, families, organizations or institutes, as well as periodicals, is provided. The goal of the project was to be a powerful stimulus to research by linking with general Church and social/cultural history.⁷¹

In the meantime inventories have been published of the Vatican archival documents covering the period of the United Kingdom of the Netherlands (1815-1830), as well as an overview of the literature and inventories connected with the Archivio Segreto Vaticano in the Belgian State Archives.⁷²

In this way, various institutions in Belgium are trying to bring the “gold mines” of the Archivio Segreto Vaticano closer to the public, and to stimulate research in it.
